COURSE ABSTRACT

For the purposes of the Law and Finance Master programme(s) the field of International Law which is most relevant is International Economic Law. This field covers economic, trade and financial relations between States and non-State actors. It also refers to relevant EU law on foreign trade and freedom of movement of capital, services and goods. Law and Finance programme(s) is not designed to provide students with extended and in-depth study of International Economic Law, but it is necessary to give students an overview of the main concepts and sources of international law which appertain to International Law as such but are inevitably the basis for International Economic Law. The purpose of the overview of relevant international law concepts and sources of international law is to equip the students of the Law and Finance Master programme(s) to recognize the relevant economic and financial issues subject to international law regulation, to be aware of the relevant global debate and challenges as well as to know where to look for relevant sources and material for a further investigation.
